The Anarchist Confederation (TAC)

Vision, Mission & Core Values

Purpose of this document

This document describes the public-facing vision, mission, and core values of The Anarchist Confederation (TAC). It complements the TAC Foundational Charter and related governance documents: the Charter establishes constitutional rules and institutional boundaries, while this document describes TAC's intended identity, purpose, and organizing principles.

Vision

The Anarchist Confederation envisions a free, self-organized, and horizontally coordinated society in which people collectively govern their communities, freely associate with one another, and organize social and economic life around mutual aid, human needs, ecological responsibility, and solidarity rather than coercive hierarchy or domination.

TAC further envisions a confederation of autonomous communities and organizations connected through voluntary cooperation, direct participation, recallable delegation, and shared principles.

Mission

The mission of The Anarchist Confederation is to build and maintain a horizontal, decentralized, and mutually supportive network of people, communities, collectives, unions, and organizations committed to anarcho-communist principles and communalist forms of self-government.

The mission includes:

- Facilitate voluntary association and mutual aid.
- Support autonomous local organization.
- Provide spaces for direct democratic participation.
- Connect communities through confederal cooperation.
- Develop systems of recallable, mandate-bound delegation.
- Coordinate shared projects and resources where collectively desired.
- Encourage solidarity among participating communities and organizations.
- Maintain transparent and accountable federation-wide administration.
- Defend the autonomy of participating organizations.
- Promote ecological and social sustainability.
- Develop practical alternatives to centralized or coercive organization.

- Translate principles into practical organizational structures rather than limiting the mission to advocacy alone.

Core Values

1. Autonomy

Local communities, collectives, and organizations retain the ability to govern their own internal affairs within the shared constitutional framework.

2. Horizontalism

TAC rejects permanent command hierarchies and emphasizes cooperation, equal political standing, distributed responsibility, and transparent coordination.

3. Direct Participation

Members should have meaningful opportunities to participate directly in decisions affecting the confederation and their communities.

4. Mutual Aid

TAC values voluntary cooperation and reciprocal support as foundations of collective life.

5. Solidarity

Participating communities and organizations support one another while respecting local autonomy and differences.

6. Voluntary Association

Participation in TAC is based on free association rather than coercive membership.

7. Recallability

Delegates and other mandate-bound representatives remain accountable to the bodies that select them and may be recalled according to established procedures.

8. Mandated Delegation

Delegation is a limited administrative mechanism for carrying out clearly defined collective mandates, not a transfer of permanent sovereignty.

9. Transparency

Federation-wide administrative processes should be documented and accessible, subject to legitimate privacy and security protections.

10. Accountability

Individuals and bodies entrusted with delegated responsibilities remain answerable to the membership and the constitutional framework.

11. Equality and Anti-Domination

TAC seeks to prevent entrenched political, social, economic, or organizational domination within participating structures.

12. Communal Self-Management

Communities and associations should have meaningful capacity to collectively manage their own social and organizational affairs.

13. Anarcho-Communist Social Principles

TAC's social framework emphasizes common provision, cooperation, mutual aid, and the organization of resources around human needs rather than coercive class or command structures.

14. Communalism and Confederation

TAC uses confederal coordination to connect autonomous communities while preserving local participation and accountability.

15. Ecological Responsibility

Social organization should account for ecological limits, long-term sustainability, and collective responsibility toward the environment.

16. Pluralism Within the Framework

Participating organizations may retain differences in local practice and interpretation while remaining within the shared constitutional principles of TAC.

17. Freedom of Association

Individuals and organizations retain the freedom to participate, withdraw, organize, and associate voluntarily, subject to mutually established rules.

18. Education and Collective Learning

TAC values political education, organizational learning, open discussion, and the development of collective capacity.

Organizational Formula

Autonomous Communities + Direct Participation + Horizontal Coordination + Mutual Aid + Recallable Delegation + Confederation

Short Public Statement

“Organize locally. Participate directly. Cooperate horizontally. Delegate temporarily. Recall when necessary. Federate voluntarily.”

Relationship to the TAC Charter: This document states TAC's vision, mission, and values. It does not replace or independently amend the Foundational Charter, Supervision Council SOP, or other formally adopted governance documents.
